Webinar 4th November,

Assessment in a Blended Learning Environment

As the next in the QQI series of blended learning seminars, QQI are delighted to present a pop up event next Wednesday, 4th November 2020 at 12.30pm ‘Assessment in a blended learning environment’ presented by Dr Mary Kelly Head of the School of Education, Hibernia College, Ms. Aisling Reast, Registrar, Hibernia College and Dr Melanie Ni Dhuinn, Assistant Professor (Education) at Trinity College Dublin. This session will focus on the range of assessment tools that can be used in a blended learning environment. It will examine how Covid-19 has required a shift in traditional assessment practices and will provide practical examples and resources of how institutions have responded to the crisis. Details of this event have been supplied by Naomi Jackson for the bulletin.

The link for this meeting event will be forwarded by QQI closer to the event. Marie O’ Neill will disseminate the link.

Some New Resources and Reports

JISC Digital Pedagogy Toolkit

About the project

The digital pedagogy toolkit has been developed by subject specialists in Jisc's digital practice team in collaboration with feedback from the UK's higher, further education and skills sectors.

The key aims of this project include:

- Support academic staff to make informed choices about how they use technology to underpin the curriculum
- Provide ideas and inspiration for how staff can overcome barriers to using technology

Student Guide to Online Teaching and Learning (EDTL),

(Written by student interns)

EDTL Student Perspectives: Tips for effective online teaching

Based on the webinar The Student Perspective of Online/Remote Teaching, featuring contributions from members of the EDTL student intern team, these are tips from students regarding online teaching during Covid-19.

Communicate Effectively

- One of the main advantages of online learning is the flexibility it allows students, and it can make students' lives much easier if this is embraced, such as by recording and uploading lectures.
- Encourage students to contribute virtually by making an environment where they want to contribute, not one where they feel forced to do so.
- Students with their cameras on can make lectures feel that bit more 'normal', but this should not be a requirement as some students may feel it to be invasive.
- VLE communication features are much easier to use than email, and all students can benefit from the forum instead of just the initial sender.

Utilise educational tools

- Utilise the VLE's features such as quizzes and the ability to link to external resources such as YouTube
